Oops, no ballot for sales tax referendum

Voters may have to wait until 2016 to vote on sales tax increase for high school

By CATHARIN SHEPARD
Staff writer

North Carolina elections law might keep a proposed half-cent sales tax increase for Hoke County school construction off the table until 2016, unless Gov. Pat McCrorry moves ahead with an unrelated proposal that could go before voters this November.

There is no countywide election scheduled for Hoke County this year, meaning there is no existing ballot for county residents to vote on the proposed half-cent sales tax increase. The county would have to create a ballot and pay to open county polling sites for the purpose of having citizens vote on the sales tax referendum, which goes against state law.

Under state General Statute 163-287, "Special elections; procedure for calling," section (a), a county can only call for a special election to be held "at the same time as any other State or county general election," or "at the same time as any other election requiring all the precincts in the county to be open."

When asked about the issue, State Rep. Garland Pierce said that under the statute, the referendum apparently cannot go to a vote until 2016.

Residency prompts suspension of chief

By CATHARIN SHEPARD
Staff writer

Raeford Police Chief Kemp Crumpler was suspended from his job for a week in February as disciplinary action for an internal matter, according to Raeford City Manager Dennis Baxley.

The suspension was in regards to an internal issue and not any sort of external complaint from the public, the city manager said.

"He's got a good file, he's a good employee," Baxley said.

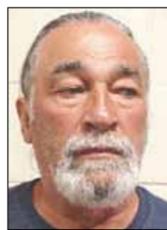

The chief said that the suspension was due to a residency requirement.

"There was a suspension and it had to do with a residency requirement," he said.

The police chief declined to go into greater detail about the situation.

'Wonderful Women of Hoke' class of 2015 picked

Hoke County celebrated some of its "Wonderful Women" this month at the annual "Wonderful Women of Hoke" reception for winners and their families.

The program, started several years ago by librarian Lynette Dial, recognizes the contributions of some of the many women volunteers and influential figures in the community.

"On behalf of Hoke County, we are very proud to have such women in our community," presenter Commissioner Harry Southerland said.

Women are "the muscle of what we are about as Americans," he said during the ceremony.

This year's class included Glendia Black-Flippin, Carol Jacobs Goins, Gwendolyn M. Quick, Brenda Lawlor, Marilyn S. Bell, Eunice Ann Locklear, Marie Daniels and Shirley T. Gibson.

Black-Flippin, the youngest of nine children, was born and raised in Bowmore. She graduated from North Carolina (See WOMEN, page 8A)

Do a little dance, show a little love

I have to have my music. Always been that way. Fortunately, technology has reduced music set-up time to nearly nil from the days when I had to move a turntable, amplifier and speakers (and records) to a worksite, often the kitchen when I was a teen—where I had to wash the Sunday lunch dishes.

Now I have a Jawbone Big Jam Box, a wireless rechargeable 10-inch brick. It may be small, but it sounds pretty good. On youth group trips, we take turns pairing our iPhones with it while riding in the van, giving each youth a chance to play deejay.

Public access to records, meetings important

A recent poll about North Carolina residents' opinions about public records and access to government information yielded disturbing results.

It came from Elon University and was released before "Sunshine Week" in March, a time dedicated every year to the importance of open government and freedom of information.

The Elon poll found that 62 percent of North Carolinians aren't aware that "sunshine laws" exist here to require governments to make their records available for public inspection, with few exceptions. And only two-thirds of those surveyed believe it is important for people to be able to get documents they want from the government. Also, just 69 percent said they believe all government meetings should be open to the public.

"Sunshine laws are foundational in a democracy because they provide the path for citizens to inform themselves about their government," said Jonathan Jones, director of the N.C. Open Government Coalition, in a statement accompanying the poll. "These poll results show that a great deal of work remains to educate North Carolinians about their right to know how their governments and elected leaders do business."

The poll numbers cited above are scary for any number of reasons. Here's one:

Media members get press releases every day from the govern-

One on One

Patrick Gannon,
Capitol Press Association

nor's office, state legislators, state agencies and other taxpayer-funded organizations. Most of us know better than to simply take them and put them online, in the paper or on TV without scrutinizing them and ensuring accuracy and appropriate context.

Releases range from well written and thorough to misleading or even false in some instances. If we had to rely solely on what politicians and state bureaucrats told us, we would seldom get a full, accurate picture. They're likely not going to volunteer what they don't want you to know.

For example, state Senate leader Phil Berger's office recently sent out a news release lauding the passage of a compromise between the House and Senate on various tax-related changes, including the stabilization of the gas tax. The release also pointed out that the compromise includes a tax deduction for teachers who buy classroom supplies out of their own pockets.

But it didn't mention the more controversial aspects of that legislation. One provision requires homeowners who have debt forgiven by a mortgage lender as a way to avoid foreclosure to pay state taxes on that forgiven debt. In other words, if a homeowner received $20,000 in mortgage principal forgiveness, he or she would have to pay $1,160 in additional taxes, based on the state's individual income tax rate of 5.8 percent, The Charlotte Observer reported. Some opponents criticized that as "kicking a man while he's down."

Also recently, Gov. Pat McCrory's office sent out a news release about his signing of legislation that "will provide added environmental protections for our state." That might have been true for parts of the bill, but the release also included somewhat misleading information about a section that some legislators and environmental groups believe could end up harming the environment.

The press release noted that the law "clarifies" that the Environmental Management Commission has the authority to make additional rules "if necessary" to address possible air pollution from hydraulic fracturing, or fracking. It did not mention that the former law would have required the commission to make additional air quality rules to address possible effects of fracking. The press release was headlined, "Governor McCrory Signs Legislation Strengthening Environmental Protections."

Do you trust government agencies to accurately tell you what they're doing? You probably shouldn't.

That's one of many reasons why public access to government records and meetings is so important.

N.C. religious freedom bills permit discrimination

BY GEORGE REED

Discussions in recent weeks of so-called religious freedom bills in Indiana, Arkansas, and now North Carolina raise issues—both legal and pastoral—which the N.C. Council of Churches has been addressing for many years.

The first words of the Bill of Rights are the religious liberty clauses: "Congress shall make no law regarding the establishment of religion nor prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The so-called Free Exercise Clause prohibits government from interfering in the practice of religion.

But constitutional rights are not absolute. So, for example, in the 1870s, the courts ruled that Mormons could believe that they were called to practice polygamy, but federal laws banning polygamy trumped the practice of polygamy even though based on sincerely held beliefs.

Over the years, the U.S. Supreme Court established a standard for Free Exercise cases: Government could "substantially burden" someone's practice of their faith only if there were a "compelling state interest" in doing so and if the limitation being imposed was the "least restrictive" manner of achieving that interest.

In 1990, the U.S. Supreme Court replaced that standard with a much less restrictive one, i.e., it made it much easier for the state to infringe on people's free exercise of religion. In response, Congress passed the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), which did nothing more than restore the standards of substantial burden, compelling state interest, and least restrictive manner.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Congress couldn't make the standards applicable to the states. (See RELIGIOUS, page 5A)

We Get Letters

We ask commissioners to fend for children

To the Editor:

An old saying—history forgotten repeats itself; to the citizens and taxpayers of Hoke County, we now again know the facts on private roads in Hoke County. If I may add that those same facts have echoed in our private road community for more than 20 years by our county commissioners. It's also a fact that we were told that the private road was a private matter between homeowners and developers. We were told that our concerns were a civil matter and we, as taxpayers, should consider a civil suit against our developer. We also were told by the former county manager that part of our private road was sold by the developer for the new countywide water line system in our community without our knowledge or consent of the sale or terms by the developer or county officials or who would maintain that side of the private road again. The county takes no responsibility for that side of the private road where the county water line is located. There is a gross amount of soil erosion over the water line along the entire private road. To this day, washed out water lines are present. Maybe those dirty down-south dirt roads do not matter, or the citizens that live along them. Again, the value of that countywide infrastructure system does. And the declining value of our homes and businesses matter. Our goals, as citizens and residents of those private roads, are clear and simple. We must think ahead. Taxpayers, you are in charge. Our children and grandchildren deserve better. We ask again for our elected officials to seek ways to enrich our children's future here in Hoke County. We ask our children to be at their best. We ask of our elected officials their best in governing this county to promote our schools, job training, public safety, after school mentor programs, youth wellness programs, and, above all, boys' and girls' club building for all children of Hoke County. For the record, two of our elected officials are again up for your reelection again. Surprise! We are working hard as taxpayers in keeping your trust. Thank you!

Stoneybrook is all about the hats

As I look at my still-brown lawn, I would swear it is normally green by this time of the year. The dogwoods are coming into their full glory, but the azaleas still sleep. In spite of this, the running of the Stoneybrook Steeplechase on April 4 announced that spring is here. As we annually prepare for this great outdoor event, the weather is always in question. In the early days of Stoneybrook at its Hoke County location, the weather was consistently bad. If it wasn't rainy and cold, it was uncomfortably windy. We were afraid that the location was jinxed, as the weather had always been perfect when the event was held in Southern Pines. I can now safely say that this is not the case. We have had several good years in a row and this year was no exception.

Our son Riley had come down from Greensboro to do some work for me, namely repainting the wooden pasture fence that he had painted 15 years ago. We left him with the paint and the good weather as we headed off to the park.

All things must evolve but I was a little surprised that Stoneybrook has now gone to e-tickets instead of the printed tickets of the past. This predictably created a good bit of confusion. Brother Rusty and sister-in-law Barbara decided to buy their tickets at the event and had to wait at the ticket desk forever as the untrained volunteer staff struggled with the computer connection needed to print the e-tickets. Once this was done, the parking attendant who checks the tickets was totally confused, thinking they had already entered the park. Thankfully, she let it slide, perhaps when she saw the look of frustration on my face. I am sure there was a good reason for the change, although there were several people I saw who got in the park free. I have an idea the staff partially gave up. They will be better prepared next year.

Frog Holler Philosopher

The regular readers of this column will remember last year's rant brought on by Charlotte's entry into the Stoneybrook hat contest. I had helped her construct a fabulous hat that was totally ignored in the confusion of the event. Her "best hat in the contest" didn't even win third place in her category. I had proclaimed that I was done with the hat contest after that. Well, of course, done doesn't really mean done, and Charlotte planned to enter again this year. This year's model was composed of many vintage hats piled up on a lampshade and adorned with some ribbons, decorative netting and accompanied with a sign reading "It's all about the hats, 'bout the hats", mimicking the popular song about the bass. I gave in and helped her tie all these hats together and found myself, once again, in the middle of the contest waiting and waiting for the judging. I will admit that the contest was run a little more smoothly this year, but it was still mass confusion. There were some great hats, but the field was not as spectacular as last year, probably because many of last year's contestants had also gotten disgusted with it.

After all the dust had settled, Charlotte won third place in her category. Once again, I was totally baffled by the winner, whose hat was possibly the least impressive in the category. Maybe it's just me!

Once that was over, we were able to enjoy the day. Our parking space is always a magnet for friends in attendance and we spread out, annexing the adjoining open space as if it was ours. Leaving Rusty with grill duty, we were able to stroll around the park a little. This is always fun, seeing old friends and running into unexpected people while borrowing food and drinks from the spreads of others. Generosity is almost taken for granted at Stoneybrook.

The races were run without the disturbing falling horses of last year. They must have filled a low spot that was tripping them.

The next morning, the phone rang fairly early. Our friend Robin Anselmini called to inform Charlotte that she was pictured in full glory in her hat on the front page of one section of The Fayetteville Observer. It seems that photographers have a better eye for hats than judges do. I'm not saying anything about my involvement in next year's contest. What good would it do!

More later.

Five books released by North Carolina authors

Here are five recent books, starting with a novel featuring a thinly disguised Jesse Helms, by North Carolina authors to put on your bedside reading table.

What is it really like to be the top aide to a powerful North Carolina senator, one who is much loved and much hated for his strong uncompromising views on heated issues, a senator who is running for reelection against a popular governor with a full war chest of campaign funds?

The Hunt-Helms race is obviously the model for the campaign chronicled in "Billy Bowater" by Winston-Salem civic leader E.C. Hanes. The book's Jesse Helms

"Billy Bowater" is fiction. But Hanes provides a realistic behind-the-scenes view of a hard-fought campaign. (Hanes will be the guest on UNC-TV's North Carolina Bookwatch at noon on Sunday, April 26, and at 5 p.m. on Thursday, April 30.)

Three council seats up this year

BY CATHARIN SHEPARD
Staff writer

Raeford voters will decide this fall who will represent them on the Raeford City Council for the next four years.

Three council seats are up for election this year. The seats currently occupied by incumbents Robert "Bobby" Conoly, John Jordan and Mary Neil King are up for election. The other two board members who are not up for election this year are Charles Allen and Wayne Willis.

Conoly, Jordan and King did not face any opponents in the 2011 election, which had a small voter turnout. Municipal election years typically see lower voter participation than years that have a presidential or midterm election. The candidates each received fewer than 130 votes in the 2011 uncontested race.

The filing period for the three city council seats is set to begin at 8 a.m. July 6 and will end at 12 p.m. July 17. One-stop voting will run from Thursday, October 22 through Saturday, October 31. Election Day is set for Tuesday, November 3.

The city council is nonpartisan, meaning there will not be a primary election for the race.

There are no county positions up for election this year. Next year, the Hoke County Board of Commissioners seats occupied by Commission Chairman James Leach and Commissioner Bobby Wright and the Board of Education seats occupied by members Hank Richards and Rosa McAllister-McRae will be up for election. Additionally, there will be a federal election as 2016 is a presidential election year. In 2016, voters will also choose the North Carolina governor and lieutenant governor.

Paranormal creatures feature in local author's book

BY CATHARIN SHEPARD
Staff writer

Shelly Burrows likes the paranormal side of things – and the more unusual, the better.

So when the Hoke County resident and her co-author Michael Stewart conspired to write their first book together, putting their own unique spin on supernatural creatures was a natural fit.

"Michael and I both like vampires, werewolves and all kinds of creatures of myth," Burrows said. "Our first book, 'Blood Moon,' mostly focuses on the vampires and werewolves."

The book tells the story of werewolf witches Conri Olcan and Saoirse MacKay, who are on the hunt for the bones of the original Alpha of the Blood Moon pack of werewolves but run into trouble when the leader of a vampire coven tries to stop them.

The authors created their own world and characters that, Burrows said, don't look anything like the paranormal beings that feature in other popular books, television shows and movies.

"Our characters are not like 'Twilight,' they're not like 'Vampire Diaries.' We have strong female characters. The couple in our book works well together, they back each other up," she said.

The authors put their own twist on the various supernatural creatures. For instance, werewolves work differently and have a special "battle form," Burrows said.

Burrows also put a local twist in "Blood Moon" and forthcoming books in the "Dark Moon" series. The story takes place in the Pinehurst, Aberdeen and Southern Pines area. The series has a lot of North Carolina history, including the Lost Colony of Roanoke, Burrows said.

Burrows was born in Michigan and grew up in Ohio. Her parents retired to North Carolina and she and her family moved to the state in 2004. She worked at the Hoke County jail and got a degree in criminal justice administration, and also worked as a stay-at-home mom.

She always enjoyed writing as a young student, Burrows said.

"When I was in school, English was one of my favorite subjects because you get to explore writing and learn grammar and how to string sentences together properly," she said.

The author made attempts at publishing her work, but life got in the way. Then she and co-author Stewart met online and started writing together. Friends encouraged them to write a book, and even though Stewart lives in California, they made it work. The two authors used email to pass chapters back and forth during their collaboration and talked on the phone for hours to get their story down in writing.

The second book, "Dark Harvest," is currently in the editing process, Burrows said.

Stewart is from Los Angeles and grew up enjoying the supernatural and horror genres. Writing "Blood Moon" was something he always wanted to do.

"Like most people who are aspiring writers, I always wanted to do it and never actually sat down and did, and finally took that leap," he said.

The first book is just the tip of the iceberg for the series and the first of many stories the authors hope to tell, Stewart said.

"It's really enjoyable for us because it's one of the things that we scratched off our bucket list. It's something that we both always wanted to do. And do it the way we wanted, and not have our characters be so much teen angst and be more adult. We're really proud of that," he said.

There's still a lot of story to tell, Stewart added.

"I can't wait until we finish the second novel so we can start on the third," he said.

They're not sure how many books the series will run, but it's going to be more than just a trilogy, Burrows said.

"So far, we've discussed it's going to be a long series because we have a lot of characters that want to be heard," she said.

Both authors still have their day jobs but ultimately hope to become full-time writers.

"We would love to keep writing books and be able to make it our full-time job. That's every author's dream, to gain such fame that what you do professionally is write for a living," Burrows said.

The series is published through Hoke County publishing company Ravenswood. The first book is available for purchase online through amazon.com as a paperback or Kindle version. The second book should be released later this year.

Arrest made in 2013 assault

Keshandre M. McLean

Deputies with the Hoke County Sheriff's Office have arrested a man wanted in connection with an armed robbery that happened in Raeford in 2013.

Authorities arrested Keshan-dre M. McLean, 20, of the 100 block of Heron Drive in Raeford on charges of common law robbery and felony conspiracy.

McLean was charged in connection with the robbery and assault on a man who was walking through the area of the North Raeford Mobile Home Park on November 20, 2013. Two men reportedly approached the victim and physically assaulted him, then went through his pockets and took his wallet and cigarettes.

Sheriff's office investigators reportedly identified McLean as one of the suspects in the case. Officers arrested him April 7.

The investigation is still ongoing as law enforcement continues seeking a second suspect. Anyone with information in the case is asked to call the Hoke County Sheriff's Office at 875-5111.

for Dennis' office and out of respect for Dennis," Crumpler said.

The city police chief is required to live within the corporate limits, Baxley said. Crumpler now meets the residency requirement "based upon the actions taken," the city manager said.

Crumpler was suspended from his job February 9-13. He is not currently facing any other disciplinary action, Baxley said. The chief of police has not faced any other suspensions in the year that Baxley has been city manager, he said.

Crumpler has been the police chief since 2012, the longest period of time anyone has held the position in the last several years.

In November 2011, former chief Edward Jagers negotiated his resignation with the city after just five months on the job. The city hired Jagers in June 2011 to replace Mike Dummett, who left the position in December 2010 to take a job in Stallings, a town near Charlotte. Dummett later resigned from that position after being put on administrative leave because of complaints filed against him.

Dummett had taken over as Raeford police chief in 2008 after former chief Kevin Locklear was fired from the department shortly after a court dropped domestic violence charges against him.

Crumpler is a Raeford native and member of the family that owns the Crumpler Funeral Home. He served as a North Carolina State Patrol Trooper for more than 24 years until he retired in March 2012.

Soil, water conservation office names poster, essay winners

The Hoke Soil and Water Conservation District named this year's winners of the Annual Poster and Essay Contest. The theme for this year was "Wetlands...Are Wonderful."

The first, second and third place winners of each school won a certificate of achievement and a ribbon.

The first place winners from each grade level at each school were selected to compete on the District Level.

The district winners won a certificate and a gift card from the Hoke Soil and Water supervisors. The first place district winners for each grade level were selected to compete in the Area VII competition. Area VII first place winners received a cash award. The Area VII winners were then eligible to go to the state level. All elementary and middle schools in Hoke County were eligible to participate in this year's contest.

The First Place poster district winners were:

Marcey Proefrock, 3rd Grade, Rockfish Hoke Elementary

Matthew Pridgen, 4th Grade, McLauchlin Elementary
Katherine White, 5th Grade, Rockfish Hoke Elementary

The Essay Contest winners were from Sandy Grove Middle School: Jadyn Geah, first; Malachi Stokes, second; and Riley Edwards, third. Malachi Stokes also won first place at the District level and first at the Area VII level. His essay was sent to the State competition. These winners received the same awards as the poster winners.

just about anywhere—even Mexico. And that is how our house-building team taught yet another group of children the Chicken Dance, and also a few surprised block layers the Cupid Shuffle.

I suppose that if the book Toxic Charity—about the bad that can be done when groups are trying to do good—is revised, the new edition will have a chapter devoted to the Cupid Shuffle. It's a fun little line dance, but I'm not sure our Mexican brothers and sisters are ready for it. Last week when our three-church team of 17 was building a house in Reynosa, Mexico, I had the Jam Box perched on a wall—with permission, set to play music on shuffle. Mackenzie (a teenager) and I were laying a course of concrete block about 10 feet off the ground when the Cupid Shuffle came on. What are you gonna do? You're gonna dance, of course. Even if you're on scaffolding. It may have been the most dangerous moment of the week for me, because a person could dance himself right to his death if he misjudged the "to the right, to the right, to the right."

Clearly, though they'd seen hundreds of teams from all over the U.S. at the Reynosa location, the Mexican staff and volunteers had never seen the Cupid Shuffle, let alone on scaffolding. Nor had they seen a team dance so frequently as work progressed from prepping a foundation to pouring a cement floor to raising block walls to pouring a roof.

The teens in our group led the way, gettin' down to "It's What I Like About You," "Twist and Shout," Kirk Franklin's "Revolution," and, yes, the chicken dance, but Frank, our near-octogenarian, wasn't past laying down a jig once in awhile. He even pulled Stephanie, a teen, to her feet in a restaurant and danced with her to the music of a mariachi band.

Some of the Mexican men warmed to the music and even a few to the dancing, and joined in from time to time, prodded by the teens.

But Elizabeth, the lady whose house we were building, enjoyed it most. At times, she looked like Snoopy doing the Happy Dance.

A house will get built, I suppose, music or no, but why be grumpy? ♦

Ballot

be on the ballot until 2016," Pierce said.

Pierce, along with Rep. Ken Goodman, introduced a bill in the State House of Representatives seeking the state's permission for the county to hold the sales tax referendum. House Bill 247, which is currently awaiting action from the House Committee on Finance, asks the General Assembly "to authorize Hoke County to levy an additional one-half cent sales and use tax" for the purpose of school construction and renovation. The money would go to pay for construction of a third campus at Hoke High and additional classrooms at other county schools.

Even if the legislation passes the General Assembly, "you still couldn't put it on the ballot of 2015," Pierce said.

The text of HB-247 states that "the election shall be held in accordance with the procedures of G.S. 163-287."

The only local election scheduled for 2015 is a municipal race for three seats on the Raeford City Council, according to Hoke Board of Elections Director Caroline Shook. Only Raeford residents vote in that election, meaning elections officials wouldn't ordinarily open the county voting precincts this year.

Although the text of the bill does not specify when the matter would go to a vote, Hoke County Schools Board of Education Attorney Nick Sojka said that the school board had intended for the matter to go to voters this November.

"The intention all along was for it to go to a vote this year," he said. Sojka said it had been his understanding from working with state officials that it could go through in the fall due to its status as an "advisory referendum," not a special election to fill an elected office.

Hoke County Attorney Grady Hunt said that, either way, the county has to wait until the state legislature makes a final decision on the bill before it can take any action regarding a special election.

"I'll just wait and see what happens with the legislation, the local bill, and if it passes, then we'll look down the road," he said. Daniel Etefagh, a senior legislative counselor who works with bill drafting for the state General Assembly, said that if the bill passes this year, the county would be able to hold the vote next year without having to get another bill through the legislature.

The other state stipulations include that a special election may be held "at the same time as the primary election in any even-numbered year" and "at the same time as a municipal general election, if the special election is within the jurisdiction of the municipality only."

Could still go on ballot
A pending decision from the governor means that Hoke voters could still see the sales tax referendum on the ballot this fall.

McCorry announced last week that he is considering calling for a statewide special election this year. The special election would seek voters' input on whether to allow the state to borrow between $2.4 and $2.8 billion to pay for road projects and state government buildings.

Legislation to schedule the bond referendum hasn't been introduced yet, but reports suggest the issue will likely be introduced before the House of Representatives this week. The filing deadline is Thursday.

If the governor moves ahead to put the state issue to a vote this November, then it would require Hoke to open all county precincts, allowing the county commission to put the sales tax issue on the ballot, if they vote to ask the county elections board to do so.

Raeford and Hoke won't hold a primary election at all this year because the only local race is for a non-partisan board.

ren's dog, Solo, was the smartest animal she had ever seen, and she fell in love with him, even though he was "an unpredictable sociopath." How Solo became an effective cadaver dog is the story of Warren's book, "What the Dog Knows: The Science and Wonder of Working Dogs."

The paperback edition of this remarkable book recently made The New York Times' list of non-fiction, paperback bestsellers. This success should not be a surprise. Warren deftly accompanies her moving story of Solo's hard-earned achievement with information about crime fighting and the science of how dogs can learn to find the bodies of dead people. The result is a warm reading experience that informs as it entertains. (Bookwatch May 3, 7)

The paperback edition of "The End of Innocence," the debut novel of Chapel Hill based innovation consultant and speaker Allegra Jordan, will be released on May 1. The book is set on the Harvard University campus and the battlefields of World War I.

Its characters and their stories of love and friendship, smashed by the war, propel readers into the turmoil the Great War brought to the lives of unprepared people.

The book is timely in North Carolina for another reason. After the war, when a memorial was created for Harvard alumni who died in service to the allied cause, there was a hot debate about including alums who died fighting for Germany. Some North Carolinians are asking if we should maintain our monuments to the brave Confederate dead soldiers, even if we decide they were fighting for a cause that is indefensible today? (Bookwatch May 10, 14)

North Carolina's great and beloved historian, William Powell, who died April 11, challenged the validity of the purported Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence. But the May 20, 1775 date of the "Meck Dec" is fixed on our state flag and seal.

Charlotte lawyer Scott Syfert, author of "The First American Declaration of Independence? The Disputed History of the Mecklenburg Declaration of May 20, 1775," lays out the facts, pro and con, and respectfully presents the opinions of both adherents and detractors so his readers can form their own conclusions about the "Meck Dec." (Bookwatch May 17, 21)

If I told you the title of a recent North Carolina book was "Foods That Make You Say Mmm-mmm," who would you guess is the author? Do you need another hint? "This dish is to die for." Of course, the author is UNC-TV's star food guru, Bob Garner. He has written several books about our barbecue and many articles about our state's foods for Our State Magazine. His new book, his publisher explains, tells us about our state's food specialties like "fish stew, Ocracoke fig cake, banana pudding, collards and even Moravian chicken pie. The book is part cookbook, part essay collection, part dining guide." (Bookwatch May 24, 28)

Using Garner's favorite words to describe the best food treats, these five books are "to die for."

Religious

but the Court left open the option of states adopting their own RFRAs. Several did; North Carolina did not.

In 1998, the N.C. Council of Churches adopted a policy statement entitled "Religious Liberty" in which we called for the "passage of a state law, comparable to the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, which would prohibit restrictions on religious freedom unless the state is using the least restrictive way to achieve a compelling state interest."

Our concern, and that of many groups at that time, was that the change in Free Exercise standards would lead to significant limitations on religious liberty and could especially encourage discrimination against "small and/or unpopular religious groups." The statement mentioned impacts on practices by, among others, Jehovah's Witnesses, Native Americans, Orthodox Jews, and Muslims. The full statement contains helpful information on the history of Free Exercise cases, the possible ramifications of the loss of the compelling state interest standard, and recommendations for protecting religious liberty, including the passage of a "pure RFLA-like statute" in North Carolina. It also warned against exceptions in RFLA laws that would discriminate against one category of people, prisoners.

In recent weeks, state RFRAs have reappeared, but this time being promoted by people opposed to same-gender marriage and worried about its increasing legal and social acceptance. The concern that has been voiced is for people in the marriage "industry" – caterers, florists, wedding directors, etc. – who might be forced to provide wedding services to couples whose weddings are contrary to their religious beliefs. Such a law has brought widespread attention to the state of Indiana, and similar bills have been introduced in North Carolina.

The Council remains committed to the protection of religious liberty and remains especially concerned that there be protection from discrimination against adherents of small, uninfluential, and/or unpopular denominations and faiths. At the same time, over the decades, we have voiced our opposition to all forms of discrimination, including those based on race, gender, ethnicity, and sexual orientation.

As currently written, the North Carolina bills would permit discrimination based on religious beliefs, not just regarding sexual orientation but also race/ethnicity, religion, and other factors. So, for example, a florist whose religious beliefs were in opposition to interracial marriages or interfaith marriages or second marriages for divorced people would be permitted to use those beliefs to refuse to serve such couples.

While we continue to support the concept of a state law that is equivalent to the federal RFRA, the bills introduced recently in North Carolina differ significantly from the federal law in scope and impact. For example, the N.C. bills omit the word "substantial" in speaking of the burden imposed, and they refer to a government interest "of the highest magnitude."

We will oppose any legislation which would permit religious beliefs to be used as a justification for discrimination.

On a pastoral level, we need to acknowledge that there are people of faith who are hurting on this issue. There are conservative people of faith who find deeply held beliefs being challenged, even within their faith traditions, and who feel change in this area has come with great speed. There are people of faith who have spent much of their lives being discriminated against because of their sexual orientation, with at least some of that coming from within their faith traditions, and an end to that discrimination can't come quickly enough.

As the Council did in 1992, we again encourage people of faith to engage across these divides, "believing that understanding and respect come out of sharing in community and being in dialogue."

George Reed is the Executive Director of the North Carolina Council of Churches.

TODAY'S HOMEWORK (Notes on Education)

"Here is a radical notion. If you want to know how your child is doing in my class, ask me. I can tell you (as most good teachers can) how he or she is doing in a few minutes, without a test and without using any numbers. The state should provide us with a few additional numbers. How many students cry before, during or after the test? How many teachers leave their school or the profession because of the tests? How many exceptional children are improperly evaluated by these silly tests? How many students will be pushed, by failing the test, into summer school, a retake of the test, or a remediation program, all of which are wasteful and useless? How much valuable instructional time, for science, social studies, the arts and creative thinking activities, will be lost because teachers are forced to teach to the test?"

Man arrested for child sex crimes

Laquan McLean

Investigators with the Hoke County Sheriff's Office arrested a man on multiple charges of alleged sexual assault against a child.

Deputies arrested Laquan McLean, 37, of the 200 block of Pilgrim Mobile Home Park in Raeford on two counts of second-degree forcible sex offense, two counts of indecent liberties with a child, two counts of sexual act by a substitute parent, two counts of felony child abuse by sex act and one count of crime against nature. He was held under a $500,000 bond.

Officers with the sheriff's office received a report last week about a sexual assault on a female child that allegedly occurred on April 4 around 10 p.m. Detectives looking into the situation conducted interviews and discovered sufficient evidence to take the suspect into custody, the sheriff's office said.

Rape

charges of first-degree rape, first-degree kidnapping, assault on a female and possession of marijuana paraphernalia. The alleged incident was reportedly domestic in nature and Locklear was denied bond.

Deputies responded April 8 to the 200 block of Stubbs Road in reference to a call about an assault that had reportedly just occurred. During the investigation, officers learned that the female victim had been sexually assaulted. She was taken to Moore Regional Hospital for treatment of non-life-threatening injuries.

Deputies arrested Locklear in connection with the case. He was taken to the Hoke County Detention Center.

Officials did not release the victim's name due to the nature of the alleged crime.

Man charged in kidnapping, sex assault

Shomari Theodore Seaton

Investigators in Florida have arrested a man wanted on multiple charges connected to crimes in the Highway 15-501 area of Hoke County near the Moore County line that were reported last December.

Law enforcement officers with the Pinellas County Sheriff's Office arrested Shomari Theodore Seaton, 25, no address known, on charges of one count of robbery with a dangerous weapon, two counts of attempted robbery with a dangerous weapon, three counts of first-degree kidnapping, one count of first-degree sexual offense, one count of attempted first-degree sexual offense, one count of crimes against nature, one count of attempted crimes against nature and one count of sexual battery.

He was held by Florida law enforcement and is pending extradition to North Carolina to stand for the listed charges.

Break-ins

possession of stolen goods. He was held under a $105,000 secured bond.

Investigators called to the 200 block of Smokey Mountain Drive interrupted a break-in in progress on April 2. The suspect fled on foot through the rear door of the home. Officers searching the area reportedly located a four-wheeler in the garage that had been stolen from a neighbor's residence the previous night. Authorities conducted a search warrant on the property and recovered items from multiple break-ins. The property was returned to owners Joane Lassiter and Fred Stalter.

Warfield is also facing charges from outstanding warrants from another breaking and entering.

CITY OF RAEFORD TAX LIST

ADVERTISEMENT OF TAX LIENS ON REAL PROPERTY

Under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by Section 105-369 of the North Carolina General Statutes, I am hereby advertising tax liens for the year 2014 upon the real estate described below. The amount advertised will be increased by interest and costs, and the omission of interest and costs from the amount advertised will not constitute a waiver of taxing unit's claim for those items. The real estate that is subject to the lien, the name of the person to whom the property is listed for taxes and the principal amount of the taxes are set out below. If the taxes remain unpaid, the lien will be foreclosed by the taxing unit and the property sold to satisfy the taxing unit's claim for taxes.

This the 15th day of April 2014.

Betty Smith, Tax Collector

The Hoke County High School Lady Bucks' softball team accomplished something that has never been done in Hoke County history. They won a tournament championship, the Robeson County Slugfest, last week in St. Pauls by defeating Lumberton 14-6. The Bucks also defeated West Bladen, the winner of the Easter tournament for the last three years, to advance to the championship game. In the first inning, the Lady Bucks jumped out to a 9-0 lead off hits by Alyssa Castillo, Bryce Smith, Taylor Jacobs and Caitlyn Crenshaw. The Bucks led the way 9-0 until the third inning when Lumberton put up six of their own to make it 9-6. It remained 9-6 until the top of the sixth when the Bucks added another run, making it 10-6. Hoke County held Lumberton scoreless the rest of the way and added four more runs in the top of the seventh to secure the tournament championship 14-6. Bryce Smith led the way from the plate going 4-5. Alyssa Castillo went 3-4 and Caitlyn Crenshaw went 2-4 with three RBIs. Coach Heather Glass said Alyssa Castillo and Caleigh Norton were the defensive players of the game. "I'm so proud of these girls for what they have accomplished so far," Coach Glass said. "This team really plays well together and they mesh really well on and off the field." Three Lady Bucks - Bethany Locklear, Bryce Smith and Caitlyn Crenshaw - made the All-Tournament team. Bethany Locklear was also named Tournament MVP. The Lady Bucks are 12-2 overall and 3-1 in the Southeastern Conference. They play Scotland County tonight at home and Richmond County Friday night at home.

She was the Hoke County 2013 Teacher of the Year and currently works with the Hoke County Civic League. She attends Leach Springs Missionary Baptist Church.

Carol Jacobs Goins is the eldest of four siblings and is married with one daughter. She is described in her biography as a "Hoke County gem," and grew up in the Hoke community. A member of the Hoke High Class of 1983, she went on to work in the medical field and currently works with inmates at Hoke County Correctional. She has a passion for preserving history and recently was the driving force in putting together a celebration for the 100th anniversary of the McCain facility. She attends the Vision of Christ Church and volunteers with the domestic violence center.

Quick, the eldest of seven children, grew up in Hoke County and graduated as part of the Hoke High Class of 1975. She went on to earn a degree in criminal justice from Fayetteville State University. She returned to Hoke County to work with the juvenile justice office. Currently, she works as a juvenile court counselor. She attends Rockfish Grove Free Will Baptist Church and is active in the church auxiliary and serves as a youth advisor. She additionally serves as a precinct judge and volunteers with the literacy council.

Brenda Lawlor, mother of Hoke Schools principal Bridget Parnell-Hayes and Tommy Lawlor, is a recent transplant to Hoke County. She volunteers with the school libraries and works to bring books to the community with the Little Free Library. She is also working with the Friends of the Public Library to support bringing a bookmobile to Hoke County. She serves as president of the organization, and is also a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She additionally volunteers with the Raeford-Hoke Museum and is a member of the Raeford United Methodist Church.

Eunice Ann Locklear, born and raised in the Lumberton area, attended school in the Fairmont community and later in Pembroke. She earned a degree from Robeson Community College and went on to work at Moore Regional Hospital. She and her husband Ray Locklear moved to Hoke County and have resided in the county for nearly 30 years. They have one son, Kenneth. Today she is a certified pharmacy technician, nursing assistant and physical therapy assistant and also works as a hospital outreach facilitator. She is youth director, choir member and Sunday school teacher at South Hoke Baptist Church and volunteers with Hoke County Parks and Recreation and the Native American Scholarship Association.

Officers with the Special

Operations Unit received a complaint about someone trespassing and possibly growing marijuana on the property in Shannon. Investigators found 434 marijuana plants on the property and allegedly connected the plants to Locklear.

Deputies arrested Locklear April 10.

The plants had a value of about $800 each, setting the total value of the drug bust at over $347,000.

The band room at Sandy Grove Middle looks like most others in middle schools, but the school is super-efficient.

Sandy Grove Middle wins recognition

Hoke County's Sandy Grove Middle School has been recognized as a verified zero energy building by New Buildings Institute. A verified zero energy building is a building that benefits from reduced energy use through onsite renewable energy sources.

Sandy Grove Middle School is the first energy-positive, LEED Platinum registered, leased public school in North Carolina. The 74,000-square-foot energy-positive facility, designed to return more energy to the grid than it consumes, is projected to save Hoke County Schools nearly $35 million over the next 40 years. The photovoltaic solar array is comprised of 2,358 roof-mounted panels, as well as four striking solar structures that stand 20 feet tall. Combined, the panels produce over 752,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity per year – enough energy to power more than 68 homes. The geothermal system, comprised of ground-sourced heat pumps, utilizes the naturally renewable ground temperature as a heat source in the winter and a heat sink in the summer. This sub-surface conductive heat transfer returns near-constant 55-degree water to the heat pumps, requiring less energy to raise or lower the indoor air temperature. Other factors in conserving energy are super insulated wall and roof assemblies coupled with high-performance glazing and extensive use of LED lighting. The LED lighting not only uses less energy than more traditional fluorescent lighting, it emits less heat, which in turn requires less mechanical cooling.

"Being recognized as a ZERO Energy Building is amazing," SFL+A President Robbie Ferris said. "This building is more than just a middle school. This facility is driving cultural change in Hoke County and is giving back to the local community through the commitment of a high performance educational learning environment."

New Buildings Institute (NBI)

is a nonprofit organization working to improve the energy performance of commercial buildings. The organization works collaboratively with commercial building market players—governments, utilities, energy efficiency advocates and building professionals—to remove barriers to energy efficiency, including promoting advanced design practices, improved technologies, public policies and programs that improve energy efficiency. NBI's current efforts include working to provide the policy and program direction and promote design practices and technologies that will result in buildings that are better for people and the environment.
