Homelessness awareness expo is Saturday

Lisa lost her job after a near fatal accident and then she lost her home. The debilitating depression that followed and a drug habit prevent her from being a welcome guest of family or friends for any period of time.

Barbara, homeless with five young children, moved in with friends who have four children and a small, three-bedroom house. Jennifer endured a year of abuse and threats from her husband's drunk, sleepover friends because she would not leave her five pets behind and could find no place that would take in them and her.

These are not the real names but are the true stories of a few of the homeless of Hoke County.

The Hoke County Coalition against Homelessness invites everyone to its third annual homelessness awareness expo on Saturday, November 19 from 11 a.m.-1 p.m. at West Hoke Middle School.

In addition to raising awareness, the event will network: promote community fellowship, information exchange, the sharing of networking information; and support the jobless.

A free turkey and dressing meal will be served along with homemade desserts.

Donations will be accepted to be distributed to the homeless: personal toiletry items and non-perishable food items are needed. Financial donations will also be accepted toward a home for women and children who find themselves homeless.

Crop disaster signup in progress

Signup for the Supplemental Revenue Assistance Payments (SURE) program for 2010 crop year losses began November 14.

"Producers across North Carolina experienced natural disasters during the 2010 crop year, causing hardship and financial losses to their agricultural operations," said Pamela Pollard, Hoke Farm Service Agency director. "The SURE program provides assistance when disaster strikes. Producers with 2010 crop losses are strongly encouraged to contact the Hoke County FSA office to enroll in the SURE program."

To qualify for a SURE payment, a producer's operation must be located in a county declared as a disaster for 2010, and have at least a 10 percent production loss affecting one crop of economic significance. Producers with agricultural operations located outside a disaster county are eligible for SURE benefits if they had a production loss greater or equal to 50 percent of the normal production on the farm. 38 North Carolina counties received a 2010 disaster designation.

To meet program eligibility requirements, producers must have obtained a policy or plan of insurance for all insurable crops through the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation and obtained Noninsured Crop Disaster Assistance Program (NAP) coverage on non-insurable crops, if available, from FSA. Eligible farmers and ranchers meeting the definition of a socially disadvantaged, limited resource or beginning farmer or rancher do not have to meet this requirement. Forage crops intended for grazing are not eligible for SURE benefits.

Hoke County producers wanting information on SURE program eligibility requirements can contact the Hoke County FSA office at 875-8111.

She ended the day as an angel

Lilmar Sue Gatlin Williams

THROUGH THE REAR VIEW MIRROR

Years ago I was at the hospital in Raleigh with my daddy. It was about two days after his surgery when one of my friends from Chapel Hill came to see me and sat with me for awhile. When the surroundings are groups of families going through some kind of misery, there is not much else to do except spend time with your loved one and comfort the family groups—each one at a stage of life that may be the end of the road for a loved one and maybe even the end of the road for your loved one.

I say my friend came to "sit with me" because that is about all you do. It seems an invasion of the other folks' privacy even to whisper when others are bearing their grief close by. We just sat, looked at each other and nodded. She and I were reading each other's mind in agreement so that no words were needed.

After awhile, she slipped a church bulletin out of her purse and put it in my hand, stood and straightened her summer cotton dress that was wrinkled from just sitting. She pointed to the place where Daddy's name was printed in the bulletin and then she pointed again. I smiled and gave her a little hug of appreciation for soliciting a group from her church to lift Daddy in prayer.

Without many words, that visit was almost at an end. We walked slowly, without a word, to the big double door that led to the hallway and then to the outside. It is good to have a friend who knows when you just want to sit. We took each other's hand as we passed the doors where other families were sitting.

We took each other's hand, bowed our heads and said a silent prayer. As we opened our eyes and looked at each other, she nodded to me to follow her. We walked a little farther, tears forming in her eyes.

What is on her heart?

As I formed that thought as a question, she turned and asked, "Have you seen a family that would have come in here sometime this morning? They are young parents. They have a couple of teenagers with them."

As I listened to her description, I thought I knew whom she was talking about. She added one more identifying item. "Their seventeen-year-old son didn't make it."

How does she know these things? We were standing outside the doors and I pointed from our side of the glass to the family who seemed to be bearing the awful grief my friend described.

My friend was a nurse, and without saying anything else to me, she headed to the nurses' station. After a few words with the nurse, the two of them made their way to the area where the mentioned family sat. I stood outside the door, wondering what was going on, feeling like an outsider; even standing so close to their grief made me sense a sort of invasion.

As my friend moved to talk to the lady that I assumed was the mother, the others in the group stood and walked closer to the two who were by now holding hands. The mother wept silently. One of the young girls gave a sort of gasp and covered her mouth with her hand.

By now, all were standing almost in a circle. My friend bowed her head, and all the rest followed her example and seemed to be listening to a prayer. When the prayer was over, my friend turned to leave, made one last grasp of the mother's hand and moved toward the outside where I had been standing while this very odd sequence had taken place.

My friend came toward me and led me toward a sofa. I had questions but I didn't ask. I waited for her to explain in her own time. She wiped her eyes and sat up straighter to begin her tale of what she had gone through this morning on her way to visit me and sit with me while my daddy was resting after his surgery.

It seems that as she left her home and moved toward town, and was still in the country, what little is left of country between Cary and Raleigh, she was behind a pickup truck. Two young boys were in the bed of the truck, laughing and enjoying the ride. As she followed the truck, a car came from nowhere and hit the truck, and both vehicles slid.

My friend had been a nurse and her area of expertise was that of an emergency room caregiver. She ran to the first boy and found him sort of "shaking it off" and getting ready to stand up. The other boy was still lying motionless about 20 feet from the truck.

By looking at his eyes, she knew he was slipping away. She sat there holding his head still and talking to him, telling him that she was his friend and his mother and daddy would be there soon, knowing though that her words were the last ones he would ever hear. She continued to stay with him, even after they were put in the ambulance to be driven toward the hospital.

She reached out and took my arm and I walked with her to the parking lot. We didn't speak until she turned the key in her door lock. "I knew it would give his family some peace to know that I was with him as he left this world. I held his head and talked to him as I would have my own son."

As we parted that day, I thought what an experience she had and what an opportunity. As I walked back into the waiting room, the mother came toward me. She said, "We'll be leaving now. They have found recipients for our son. They have him on life-support but they will be taking him off now. Tell your friend for us. She was such a blessing..."

"Nothing could have given me more peace than her words, and the skill that enabled her to bring the words to us that he passed away without suffering, and there was nothing more that could have been done for him."

As we parted, both of us seemed to realize, almost at the same moment, that today my friend woke never knowing that before the sun set in the western sky, she would be recognized as one of God's angels here on earth.
